

Six Calls Equals Success

The Surprising Impact of Call Frequency on Lead Conversion

Summary: Too often, sales managers underestimate the value of persistence. In a recent analysis of over 15 million sales leads, Leads360 discovered that making 2 calls versus just 1, increases the chances of contacting a lead by 87%. The same study revealed that a disappointing 50% of leads are never called a 2nd time. The research also found that attempting contact 6 times resulted in nearly the maximum possible contact rate, yet nearly 60% of sales people made less than 6 contact attempts.

Sales leads are expensive, and the typical sales manager does not have accurate and readily available call metrics. How are you maximizing conversion rates? Can you provide a clear picture of the number of contact attempts

Your prospects are both busy and cautious, and more than 60% of contactable leads will not be reached on the first contact attempt. The most successful sales and marketing teams know this and keep a close eye on their return on investment (ROI), by tracking key metrics like call attempts. You can be sure your company will greatly benefit from implementing a sales workflow which enforces 6 contact attempts.

If you aren't measuring your call metrics, or you

Don't Give Up Too Early
For contactable leads, an agent has a 93% chance of making contact after 6 attempts versus only 39% on the first attempt. Therefore leads with less than 6 contact attempts should still be pursued aggressively.

sales agents are making on each lead? Chances are, your sales team is not making enough attempts to maximize contact and conversion rates. This lack of visibility means that valuable sales leads are being wasted.

Never Make Just One Call
For contactable leads, there is an 87% increase between call attempts 1 and 2. That means agents who make more than one call attempt, tremendously increase their success rates.
